

Email Notification Breakdown

Customer and vendor messages across the SMPLFIX order lifecycle. This is a recommended email plan based on the client brief: send only messages that confirm an important status, require an action, or prevent a missed appointment.

Notification principles

1	One event, one clear purpose	Avoid duplicate confirmations across email, SMS, push, and the portal. Email is the durable record; urgent time-sensitive events can also use a preferred immediate channel.
2	Action first	Every message should either ask the recipient to do something, confirm a meaningful milestone, or prevent an exception.
3	Protect contact and pricing privacy	Vendor and customer contact details stay hidden. Customers see client-facing prices only; vendors do not see the coordination fee or customer charge.
4	Use preferences for low-priority messages	Seasonal prompts, referrals, and autopilot recommendations should be preference-controlled and never bundled with operational notices.

Messages that should usually stay in the portal

Do not create an email for every status change. The portal should carry routine activity such as matching progress, status history, photo uploads, detailed quote comparisons, activity-feed events, and non-urgent messages. Email should point to the portal when the recipient needs to make a decision or retain a record.

Open decisions to confirm with the client

Decision	Why it matters
Quote routing rules	Define which jobs are auto-assigned, internally selected, or sent to customers for quote comparison.
Channels and preferences	Confirm when SMS/push duplicates are allowed, quiet hours, and which marketing-style messages are opt-in.
Cancellation policy	Define deadlines, fees, approval path, and messages for a vendor or customer cancellation.
Emergency dispatch	Define after-hours ownership and whether an emergency notice is email-only, SMS, phone, or all three.
Government contracts	Confirm contract-specific notices for compliance, daily logs, certified payroll, bonds, and expiring documents.

Recommended next step

Approve this matrix as the baseline communication policy, then map each approved event to its email template, portal notification, owner, trigger, and delivery channel before development begins.
